Cyprus a Crossroad of Asia-Africa-Europe

Cyprus

Political system: Republic

Capital city: Nicosia

Total area: 9 250 km²

Population: 0.8 million

Currency: euro

Listen to the official EU language: Greek

The history of Cyprus is among the oldest in the world. The first signs of civilisation traced in archaeological excavations and research date back 11.000 years to the 9th millennium BC.

The discovery of copper in Cyprus in the 3rd millennium BC brought wealth to the island and attracted commerce from its trading neighbors. Yet, although geographically placed at the crossroads of three continents - Europe, Asia and Africa - and a meeting point of great world civilisations, Cyprus has developed and for centuries maintained its own civilisation. The Mycenaean-Achaean Greeks settled in the island between the 13th and 11th century BC. They introduced the Greek language and culture, both of which are preserved by Greek Cypriots to this day.

Cyprus is the largest island in the eastern Mediterranean and is situated east of Europe. The two main mountain ranges are the Pentadactylos in the north and the Troodos in central and south-western part of the island. Between them is the fertile plain of Mesaoria.

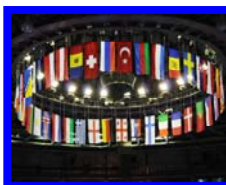

Cyprus has long been a crossing point between Europe, Asia and Africa and still has many traces of successive civilisations – Roman theaters and villas, Byzantine churches and monasteries, Crusader castles and pre-historic habitats. The island's main economic activities are tourism, clothing and craft exports and merchant shipping. Traditional crafts include embroidery, pottery and copperwork. Cyprus is becoming a crossroad of offshore companies and a business center of the region.

Traditional local dishes include the meze – a selection of appetizers served as a main dish, halloumi cheese and the zivania schnapps.
